Bryce Harlow Foundation Now Accepting Applications for 2017-18 Fellowships

WASHINGTON, D.C., January 23, 2017 – The Bryce Harlow Foundation, the premier organization in Washington for government advocacy, is now accepting applications for its Bryce Harlow Fellowships. Fellowships are awarded to individuals working full-time, attending graduate school part-time and who anticipate having careers in the field of government relations, lobbying or advocacy.

The prestigious and competitive Fellowships provide financial assistance for graduate school tuition, valuable mentorships with foundation board members, and seminars on relevant issues confronting the profession. In recent years the foundation has awarded as many as twenty fellowships. “Each year the candidates are more accomplished and impressive,” foundation president Barbara Faculjak said.

“The expanding nature of advocacy means we are seeing applicants studying for MBAs or Masters degrees in communications in addition to the more traditional public policy and law degrees,” Faculjak continued. “We encourage every eligible graduate student to apply for the fellowship, whether you are working on Capitol Hill, at lobbying or communications firms, at a trade association or at a corporation.”

For thirty-six years, the Bryce Harlow Foundation has promoted the highest ethical standards in the professions of lobbying and government relations. The heart of its work is education. Since its inception, the Bryce Harlow Fellowship program has helped support the education and growth of more than 250 young professionals.
